The Flower of Chinese Buddhism. [From the book The Flower of Chinese Buddhism, by Daisaku Ikeda] Earlier Buddhist thought had described the Ten Worlds, or ten realms into which beings may be reborn depending upon the karma they have accumulated in their past existences. These realms range from the lowest states of being, such as hell or the realm of hungry spirits, to the highest states, those of bodhisattvas and Buddhas.

Ever since I was a child I have felt deeply attracted to China. We Japanese have strong feelings of affinity with China, and I believe this is due not merely to China's geographical proximity, but to the fact that the two nations have been bound by cultural ties over a period of many centuries, and in particular to the fact that Japan received its knowledge of the Buddhist religion primarily ...
